The agreement with Aurora strengthens our R&D programs, cultivation, manufacturing and service to patients, and we believe will help us build strong brand equity in the Australian market.”

Aurora is incorporating industry leading technology in the world’s most advanced new facility now under construction in Edmonton, and we will benefit greatly from a regular exchange of information, including reciprocal visits of key personnel.”

“This agreement with Cann is a key element in executing on our international expansion strategy,” said Terry Booth, CEO. “By transferring important operational know-how to Cann, our intention is to support not only the development of one of the leading players in this market, but also to accelerate the development of the broader Australian medical cannabis sector.”

The visit of Cann's Board coincided with a visit to Canada by Victorian Agriculture Minister Jaala Pulford, who met with Aurora management and inspected the company's facilities.

Allan McCallum said it was pleasing that the Minister was investing the time and effort to visit facilities and meet with industry leaders in other parts of the world. "It is important that Australia learns from the experience gained in countries where the industry has been established for some time and adopts high standards and best practices."
