Stackla Revaluation

Bailador has revalued its investment in Stackla up by $11.5m (9.3c pre-tax NTA per share) as at 30th September 2020.

Stackla helps brands effortlessly discover, curate, rights manage and publish User Generated Content (UGC) at scale. Stackla's AI-powered enterprise UGC platform allows customers to take advantage of the huge groundswell towards authentic user content.

Bailador wrote down the valuation of our investment in Stackla to nil in September 2019 when Stackla had its access to the Facebook platform suspended. Stackla's access was rightly reinstated after six weeks. Despite Stackla's reinstatement, Bailador took the conservative approach of maintaining the carrying value of our investment at nil. We did this to allow time for any business impact to be clear, and then when COVID hit, we took further time to ensure we had clarity of business performance.

After a full year of holding our valuation at nil, some might say overly conservatively, we are now increasing our carrying value based on demonstrated business performance and market attractiveness.

Stackla has had a number of significant recent customer wins including Apple and Sinclair Broadcasting in the US. Stackla has continued to develop its leading tech platform, and its new Organic Influencer product is getting tremendous traction. The business is profitable, and we believe its prospects are strong.

Due to COVID-related disruptions, many businesses are re-examining how they interact with their customers. User Generated Content has the authenticity that consumers are looking for, and is very cost effective for brands. The move to authenticity has only accelerated in recent times, and Stackla is well placed to benefit.

Finally, we would like to express our respect for the Stackla team led by founders Damien Mahoney and Pete Cassidy. The Stackla team were forced to deal with a massive unfair blow to the business that they had built. They have adapted, rallied, and are thriving.
