Perth, Australia (March 10, 2016) Micro-donations platform provider Activistic Limited (ASX: ACU) ("Activistic" or "the Company") is pleased to advise it has signed Church Army UK to its Ralli app, adding a sixth vertical of faith-based giving to the app and providing an entry into the significant church giving market.

Ralli leverages Activistic's patent-pending technology to ensure the lowest possible cost of fundraising to both the donor and the industry via an efficient collection technology that enables regular payments via the giver's phone bill.

Church Army is made up of eleven independent Church Army societies; in UK, Australia, Barbados, Canada (called Threshold Ministries), Denmark, East Africa, Jamaica, Malawi, New Zealand, USA, Ireland, and Vanuatu. These societies work in more than 20 different countries. Activistic and Church Army are in discussions about developing a white label app for the world-wide organisation, as it a significant sized charity with large reach.

Nigel Lee, Executive Chairman of Activistic Holdings said: "The addition of Church Army UK to our Ralli app is a significant milestone as it not only adds to the credibility and noteworthy charities on the app itself, but represents our first foray into faith-based giving."

"This vertical is very significant for us to enter into as it represented over US$100 billion of donations in the US alone in 2014. We are looking forward to the soft launch of the Ralli app later this month complimenting the strong momentum being achieved in the US with Veterans Call."

Ralli will have more than 80 charities on boarded and be able to receive donations once launched later this month, with at least five top UK charities per cause including animal welfare, disaster relief, health and research, and poverty. The addition of Church Army provides an additional vertical of faith based giving to the Ralli app.
