Energy Action appoints Chief Technology Officer to accelerate digital growth strategy

Energy Action (ASX: EAX) has strengthened its senior management team, appointing Clint Irving to the newly created role of Chief Technology Officer (CTO). Clint will be responsible for driving the Company's strategy to develop scalable, platform-based technology solutions for energy contract management.

As Energy Action's CTO, Mr Irving will lead the Company's technology team that focuses on software development and IT operations. This includes expediting the delivery of Energy Action's technology roadmap, integrating existing applications into a cohesive source-to-pay energy contract management platform encompassing energy data, procurement, accounts payable automation, analytics, and works management.

Mr Irving joins Energy Action from internet of things (IOT) based power retailer, Pooled Energy, where he spent seven years, most recently as Technology Chief. Prior to that, he held the position of senior software engineer with multi-national conglomerate, Honeywell, focusing on building enterprise-grade IT systems.

Chief Executive Officer, John Huggart, said: "Securing a Chief Technology Officer of Clint's calibre is a coup for Energy Action, particularly given his proven leadership capability and deep technical experience."

"Clint's expertise in software development and energy markets will help us deliver platform-based technology solutions that provide operational scale while satisfying clients' evolving energy needs. Alongside this goal, we will also continue to leverage our strong cashflow position to invest in our core procurement and energy management products."

Incoming Chief Technology Officer, Clint Irving, said: "I'm truly passionate about meeting the growing demand for smart energy technology and building highly performant and massively scalable software engineering solutions. Energy Action is perfectly placed to re-imagine the B2B energy market and play a significant role in the technology revolution that is underway in the sector."

Chairman, Murray Bleach, added: "Clint brings a fresh focus on creative thinking and technology innovation that will complement the existing management team, and his appointment heralds the next phase of creating value for Energy Action's customers and shareholders."
